Inventory of the Mills E. Godwin Jr. Papers 1947

This 1957 classic paper firmly established that the tympanal organs of noctuid moths are specifically tuned to the ultrasonic signals used by bats, and in the process, initiated a field of research to determine the neural mechanisms that mediate this evasive behavior. In spite of the fact that these expenditures are not assumed to occur further out in time relative to the datum time point used, discounting does significantly reduce the effective cost of the license renewal programs. However, one could argue that a preferred measure of a writer's influence is the extent to which his work is cited outside his own field or, better, the number of different subject fields that draw upon his work.
