On completion of the ritual, the aspirant would have transcended the limitations of his human existence and his soul would have attained complete perfection. Dans la deuxième partie de notre thèse, nous examinons de près la manière dont Rāzī critique plusieurs doctrines avicenniennes; notamment, celles de l'immatérialité de l'âme humaine, de l'univocité de son essence, de sa génération temporelle, et de la nature de son unité vis-à-vis les diverses fonctions qu'elle exerce.

Ḥarb al

Si Rāzī adopte la disposition traditionnelle, avicennienne de ce texte, il s'en sert comme modèle afin d'apprécier les forces et les faiblesses des arguments d'Ibn Sīnā et d'y faire valoir ses propres théories. The occult practices described therein are attributed to the Sabians, a historical group who lived in Harrān in Upper Mesopotamia. The second is about man and the search for his identity; a theme which involves the author's opinion on reason and religion, the earthly world and the here after.
