Who's Afraid Of Western Civ?

HIST-180 The internet and cell phones seem to have revolutionized our society, changing how we learn about new things, relate to each other and understand ourselves.

Penn State Black History / African American Chronicles

The AWS was the coordinating body for cultural, social, and educational activities for women at Penn State. Our guiding principle will be that artistic texts offer especially rich reflexive occasions for studying the overwhelmingly non-reflexive aesthetics of always-on computing. We explore critiques of the conceptualization of globality and worldliness as a factor in determining social, cultural, and historical change.

CliffsNotes Study Guides

The course also introduces several important movements in twentieth century American arts and letters, including Naturalism, Modernism, Social Realism, the Beat movement, Social Surrealism, and Postmodernism. Evaluation Method: Short writing assignments and a final project.

When the Past is the Classroom

Ask them to tell about the experience, especially if they have taken one of the mule-powered boat trips through the locks. A generation after his death, Du Bois remains a potent figure internationally, and a source of inspiration for millions.

Events

These claims have been based, above all else, on the status of blacks as America's historical victims. Team taught by the entire AMS faculty, lectures will include topics on film, music, literature, art, sports, and other cultural artifacts. With Marcus Coelen, she is currently working on The Cambridge Introduction to Jacques Lacan.

Thoughts for All Time

This course analyzes the changing nature of American values for the period dating from the 1970s through the 2000s by examining key developments in the everyday life patterns and cultural expressions of Americans in contexts that range from the local to the international. Teaching Method: Impromptu lectures, presentations, discussion. The focus is on the taxonomy, anatomy, behavior, ecology and cognition of our closest living relatives.
