What is commissioning and how is it changing?

This may have shifted during the crisis. Local areas can apply to take on greater responsibilities, although there is no single model for this and proposals are approved on a case-by-case basis. NHS England also commissions some public health services, such as immunisation and screening programmes, as well as health care for people in prisons and secure units and some services for the armed forces.

Challenges of commissioning and contracting for integrated care in the National Health Service (NHS) in England

In many areas, the commissioning focus on markets has resulted in high-scale and low-cost delivery models. Allen P: An economic analysis of market based reforms in the English NHS.

Can new regulator NHS Improvement save the health service?

NHS improvement and NHS England see the sustainability and transformation plans now being drawn up in every area as the cornerstone of their push to turn the financial crisis around, with commissioners, providers and local authorities supposed to unite around a local blueprint for change. The identity of our informants was kept confidential and findings are reported anonymously.

NHS commissioning

However, I am yet to see any detailed analysis of patient demand except often it is reported that the demand has increased due to increase in elderly population increasing. This more integrated approach to commissioning mirrors the more integrated approach to delivering health and care services that has been developing for some time.

The future of commissioning for social care

. However, the pandemic also highlighted existing issues in social care such as a narrow market, workforce pressures, and the lack of choice and value experienced by people who require support.

Five traps to avoid in a new round of NHS legislation

The research study is predicated on the existence of a media of power commissioning repertoire, which makes use, alternately, of relational approaches, contracting levers, markets and competition, ideological disciplines, financial incentives and robust management of procurement. Arrangements vary, ranging from joint working to the establishment of new governance and financial arrangements, including integrated commissioning boards and pooled budgets.
