Lettres américaines d'Alexandre de Humboldt (1798)

Humboldt and Bonpland captured and dissected some eels, which retained their ability to shock; both received potentially dangerous electric shocks during their investigations.

Alexander von Humboldt

He had already selected scientific instruments for his voyage.

Alexander von Humboldt

Humboldt was a significant contributor to cartography, creating maps, particularly of New Spain, that became the template for later mapmakers in Mexico. Humboldt published two works on the Russian expedition, first Fragments de géologie et de climatologie asiatiques in 1831, based on lectures he gave on the topic. Humboldt's researches into the vegetation of the mines of led to the publication in Latin 1793 of his Florae Fribergensis, accedunt Aphorismi ex Doctrina, Physiologiae Chemicae Plantarum, which was a compendium of his botanical researches.
