The IQ Controversy and Academic Performance

Despite the identification of cultural differences in child development, parenting, the presentation of behavior problems, and the assessment of behavior problems, little research has been done on how these differences affect treatment using behavioral parent-training programs. Much of the current understanding about African American English AAE has come from the 1960s and 1970s research of sociolinguists such as Labov 1969, 1972a, 1972b and Wolfram 1969. Conclusions: We suggest future research and clinical directions that will ultimately assist clinicians to provide high-quality mental health services to African American children.
