Irq al

Thus the Qur'an says: If the whole of mankind and the jinn were to gather together to produce the like of this Qur'an, they could not produce the like thereof, even if they backed each other up. They had so many camels that as they left Makkah and camped for the first night, Abu Jahal sacrificed 10 camels to feed the entire army. In fact, it can be maintained that had it not been for the strong desire to preserve the Qur'an, its form, grammar, pronunciation, and accuracy, the Arabic alphabet and writing system might not have developed as quickly as they did.

Abu Musab al

Eloquence and the ability to compose articulate prose or poetry were foremost among the traits of a worthy bedouin.

Irq al

This explains why the Qur'an has been referred to as 'Muhammad's miracle', or.

Abu Musab al

With the emphasis placed on eloquent and articulate speech, the prominent position occupied by those who had the talent for linguistic composition, and the pride the early Arabs took in their language, it is little wonder that the Qur'an was revealed in the most eloquent, articulate, and elaborate style the Arabic language has known. The varying speeds which Taha Husayn mentions appear to be achieved with remarkable spontaneity, which is the result, in Taha Husayn's words, of 'a careful selection of words and expressions. The Qur'an commonly uses this technique in situations where satire is intended satire which is directed at the actors and their behavior as in the story in sura 68 al-Qalam.

Irq al

Persian scholars engaged in the field of Islamic studies wrote mostly in Arabic.
