Neither the shift to centralized state-imposed executions nor that to the use of electrocution was unique to Texas at the time; both reflected national trends of the day. The central proposition of local beliefs that allowed this to occur was embedded in the tradition of slavery and the inherent logic of exclusion.

The following crimes are considered capital murder in Texas: murder of a peace officer or fireman who is acting in the lawful discharge of an official duty and who the person knows is a peace officer or fireman; murder during the commission or attempted commission of kidnapping, burglary, robbery, aggravated sexual assault, arson, obstruction or retaliation, or terroristic threat; murder for remuneration or promise of remuneration or employs another to commit murder for remuneration or promise of remuneration; murder during escape or attempted escape from a penal institution; murder, while incarcerated in a penal institution, of a correctional employee or with the intent to establish, maintain, or participate in a combination or in the profits of a combination; murder while incarcerated in a penal institution for a conviction of murder or capital murder; murder while incarcerated in a penal institution serving a life sentence or a 99 year sentence for a conviction of aggravated kidnapping, aggravated sexual assault, or aggravated robbery; murder of more than one person during the same criminal transaction or during different criminal transactions but the murders are committed pursuant to the same scheme or course of conduct; murder of an individual under ten years of age; or murder in retaliation for or on account of the service or status of the other person as a judge or justice of the supreme court, the court of criminal appeals, a court of appeals, a district court, a criminal district court, a constitutional county court, a statutory county court, a justice court, or a municipal court. The CID is responsible for the confinement of adult felony and state jail felony offenders who are sentenced to incarceration in a secure facility. Commonwealth that a convicted felon.

Texas State Penitentiary at Huntsville

In late summer 1923, legal hangings in Texas came to an end, and the electric chair replaced the gallows. Further north, in the East Texas County of Rusk, just south of Longview, a relatively large community, a black mother and her baby were killed when she tried to seek new employment opportunities. Sorensen offer a more complex thesis.

The Rope, the Chair, and the Needle

The stories of the condemned are interwoven with fact and interpretation to provide compelling reading.
