These began to call for the extension of the cooperative concept to defense and security policies. Preceding the Maastricht Treaty provisions, the most significant of the Franco-German initiatives on the European defense identity was the Kohl-Mitterrand proposal of October 14, 1991. This has perhaps been most marked in western Europe, given the establishing of the internal market and the prospects for an economic and monetary union.

This transformation is explored in three stages. Conventional forces in Europe, and confidence and security building measures are also explored. Some argue that it was only because the West refused to give in to Soviet threats that the latter eventually gave up; or that the 'long peace' in Europe was due to the combination of a bipolar alliance structure, pitting the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation NATO against the Warsaw Pact, with the presence of nuclear weapons on both sides.
