

Anglo-Saxon poetry

Dent - Anglo Saxon Old English Poetry Examples: Literature History

Riding waves of water crestlets.
Golden, garish, gleaming warriors
Sift the sun that sits on high
To blear the eye and blind the soul.

Gentle winds with waves all dance.
Shifting, shining shapes of glitter
Channel, chortle, chuckle, and prance
As pretty primal perturbations.

The eye must squint and squeak out tears
To see the shadows showing there
Between the brilliant buoys of sunlight
Between the crowns and crests of chop.

Surface play, a seeming thing:
For inches only under duck-paths
Crystal calm cares nothing
For sun or breezes brash delights.

Reid, Jana / Anglo

The oldest collections of church sermons is the , found in a 10th-century manuscript. After enduring three days of this torment, Andrew summons a torrent of water from a pillar in his jail cell, which swells up within the walls and threatens to drown everyone within the city walls. You need look no further than contemporary rap and hip-hop music to see that similar impulses drive poetry today, such as the urge to tell a story using meter and rhyme, the desire to brag or boast about conquests and achievements and the impulse to relate stories of daring or adventure.
