Because of a largely perceived threat to the government, temporary legislation was introduced. The Prince Regent, however, found it impossible to form a different coalition and confirmed Liverpool as prime minister on 8 June. Liverpool is considered a skilled politician, and held together the liberal and reactionary wings of the Tory party, which his successors, Canning, and Wellington, had great difficulty with.

When income tax was abolished in 1816, indirect taxes were raised, adding to the burden on the poor. On the other hand, the government was undoubtedly faced by disorder and it had no effective police force. While Pitt was seriously ill, Liverpool was in charge of the cabinet and drew up the King's Speech for the official opening of Parliament.
