Leading Cross

Leaders must help the group center on their new identity in Christ and lead them in a process of commitment to Christ and to one another to be the people of God on mission together. This puts the outcome at risk but it frees the leader to be a participant in seeking a solution. In order to achieve the aims of furthering applied knowledge and wisdom, the journal is interested in publishing articles pertaining to the professional practice of leadership and foresight.

Quick Review: Leading Cross

It is divided into four parts: Inspiring People, Building Trust, Pathways to Empower, and Leading Cross-Culturally. Being a cross-cultural leader is about leading, accepting others along with their different cultures, making culturally informed decisions, and building a community of trust.
