Palpitation is no doubt accountable for by the enlarged and hypertrophied ventricle beating more violently, and by nutritional changes at times increasing the rate of the heart's beat. The ventricle became hypertrophied and the systole was pro- longed, increased strain being thrown upon the mitral valve as a result of this and the compara- tively slow delivery of blood into the aorta. Abraham , 1830-1919 and Robinson, William J.
