Hong Kong Law Journal

Secondly, had the plaintiff proved on a balance of probabilities that the defendant was responsible for the accident in whole or in part? For many, however, including governmental defendants, formal protection in the form of legislation is considered necessary. A second decision, from the Canadian province of Alberta, Robinson v Cragg, illustrates the effectiveness of apology legislation for excluding an admission of fault from being admitted as evidence in a negligence action. Apology legislation therefore offers wider protection to apologies and, in some jurisdictions, even more comprehensive protection than what is available for communications made during settlement negotiations or mediation.

. . Use and effectiveness of apology legislation Uncertainty about the legal and evidential consequences of an apology is frequently mentioned as one reason why defendants in civil cases are sometimes advised not to offer apologies.

3. Statement of Claim

Ignoring the shouted warnings of a security officer, he was struck by the train and dragged 30 to 40 feet down the track. This reality not only gives rise to a certain degree of uncertainty as to the limits of the protection afforded by apology legislation, but also to a need for members of the public, the legal profession and insurance industry to be made specifically aware thereof. There are a number of other decisions that illustrate that evidence of an apology continues to be admissible in civil proceedings for purposes other than those for which it is excluded by apology legislation.
