Bodoland Movement: Bodos struggle for separate state

This process of migration was continued even after independence, and in fact it blew out of proportion. There was a growth of subinfeudation because since the cultivating tenants were generally unprotected and the overcrowding of land led the tenants to compete with one another to acquire land, the rent of land went on increasing. This gave rise to the problem of shortage of space.

The disease, which kills mostly children and pregnant women, is largely spread by mosquitoes. This settlement created for the first time property in land and also a propertied class in the form of zamindars and other landed interests who were hitherto considered to be merely hereditary agents of government for the collection of rents or revenues from the peasants.

Bodoland Movement: Bodos struggle for separate state

The principles of this were applied to other places like Assam and Myanmar. The foundation for this movement was already laid in the British era when Britishers allowed the immigration of landless peasants from the densely populated bordering districts of Bengal Now Bangladesh to the sparsely populated districts of the Brahmaputra valley of Assam which was dominated by Bodo people.

The zamindar did not have to take permission of any court while doing so.

Livelihoods Tracking System

The landbarid enjoyed privileges which were used for their self use. A portion of the land is wasted owing to fragmentation being too excessive as to prevent agricultural operations; another portion is lost in numerous boundaries. The primary interest of the British rulers was the collection of revenue to support their colonial ventures and the system of land records was organized to serve that purpose.

Assam

In all the areas where the Mahalwari system was applied, the land revenue was to be revised at particular intervals of time. The SGSY aims at providing self-employment to villagers through the establishment of self-help groups. The ceiling should apply both to family holdings and holdings of individuals, the expression family being deemed to include husband, wife and dependent sons, and grand children.
