[PDF] The rise and fall of the “McNamara line”: Enduring lessons from the Vietnam War

It is amazing how multi-million assets including planes, sensors and a sophisticated computer were foiled by very simple means : 1. QU-22B Pave Eagle The sensors were delivered to the target areas by U. What useful principle can they derive from an account of the events of a few years in a unique part of the world? America had a commitment to South Vietnam.

The interdiction campaign against the enemy logistics corridor was massively expanded due to the increased number of U. North Vietnamese attention then shifted to Ranger South, where 400 South Vietnamese troops, including 100 survivors of Ranger North, held the outpost for another two days before General Lam ordered them to fight their way five kilometers southeast to FSB 30.

The War Against Trucks: Aerial Interdiction in Southern Laos, 1968

The invasion, however, signaled the end of Commando Hunt, for the South Vietnamese did not take over the electronic surveillance network-with its computer, sensors, and communications equipment-that made the series of aerial interdiction operations possible. New York, Viking, 1983, p.
