8.5A: Distribution of Wealth and Income

The degree of inequality can be illustrated on a Lorenz curve. The median household of all groups owes no debt, and the mean debt owed by all groups is roughly the same. A study by the World Institute for Development Economics Research at the United Nations reports that the richest 1 percent of adults owned 40 percent of global assets in the year 2000, and that the richest 10 percent of adults accounted for 85 percent of the world total.

Income distribution

At every income quartile, black owner households allocate a smaller share of their portfolio to IRAs and Keoghs than do white owner households, although the differences narrow in the higher income quartiles. However, the proportion of all households owning homes is far smaller than the proportion owning other forms of net worth. Owner households are those that have the specified form of financial wealth.

b) Factors that affect wealth and income distribution

Though the role of money and finance in determining inequality between capital and labor transcends any particular understanding of the process by which the creation of money leads to inequity, specific proposals for the democratization of money will depend on the explanation of how money comes into existence and how it supports capital accumulation. A country with perfectly equal distribution does not exist. For example, despite both being Western civilizations, typical Americans and Europeans do not have the same views on redistribution policies.

The ASEC and the ACS are conducted annually by the Census Bureau, while the SCF is conducted once every three years by the Federal Reserve. In fact, the wealth gap far exceeds the income gap. The phrase can be emotionally charged and used to exaggerate or misconstrue the motivations of opponents during political debates.
