I also agree on all four of your suggestions. Like keithsutherland, on said: It appears that someone with the same name as the author of this piece has just been arrested for plotting to blow himself up on the National Mall in order to increase awareness of sortition: This highlights the need to proceed in a thoughtful and measured way, rather than pursuing some kind of activist agenda.

The Project Gutenberg eBook of Commentaries on the Laws of England, Book 1 of 4, by William Blackstone.

It will also explore the intersection between competition, consumer protection and privacy, which is raising important institutional questions for the allocation and coordination of regulatory responses. We will use case studies, along with the writings of more recent scholars, to assess the relevance of their approaches for contemporary scholarship and social issues. He held that the Court could look to the legislative history of the Patents Act, 1964, in ascertaining the intent of the legislature and construing the meaning of one of the Act's provisions.
