Henri Matisse, roman

The painting looks as if it were made yesterday, and in some places like the lower right where bare canvas is visible , seems unfinished.

“Matisse, comme un roman”

The initial impetus for this sculpture stemmed from Matisse's interest, amounting to a virtual obsession, in Michelangelo's Night, an allegorical reclining figure in the Medici Chapel, Florence fig. Both volumes are in near fine condition with Vol 1 having a small spot the bottom edge of the front board and a small spot to the foreedge. We might say that the woman represented in this relief stands between the realms of sculpture and painting, or between three-dimensional reality and the flatness of painted representation.

paintings by Henri Matisse (1940)
