Du Pin does not positively say who opened and closed, but from his narrative I should draw a conclusion the very opposite of yours. A cup of strong coffee was made for me by the sergeant in command of our escort, we had coffee in those days, later our ingenuity was taxed to discover substitutes for it, which was the only thing that refreshed me on the march. He died at Georgetown, on the 15th of June, 1817, and his mortal remains were laid in the convent chapel of the Visitation, where they still remain.
