But farmers as a whole soon recognised that the subsidy system was untenable. Moreover, bringing home the Cup was only the most visible sign of the new vigour, confidence and strength in New Zealand and its people. It is also interesting to remark how the opponents of change have often become its most vocal advocates, as exemplified by Federated Farmers and recently the Manufacturers Federation.

An incorrigible escapee he was often on the run and through various misadventures learned the art of subterfuge in order to maintain his freedom. Their story is not history; rather it is a prescient tale about the swings and roundabouts of political fashion, a story that reminds us that when testing times come knocking complacent orthodoxy is not the solution but then neither is radical extremism. Note that we do not have overlapping local authorities as in the U.

Reform reached beyond market institutions. Do we really want to return to the days of import and exchange controls, inefficient state monopolies, old broken-down cars, a gray, dull uniformity of relative poverty and quaint backwardness. Inflation adds to the uncertainty of investment decisions, and leads to arbitrary redistributions of wealth.
