Southeast Asia Collection

Another valuable and still under-explored primary source base for the history of the region can be found in Chinese-language texts. The networking of ideas took shape in a highly staged support of Islamic intellectuals and Orientalists. Since then, Muslim communities had been established across many other parts of Southeast Asia, where in the 21st century they comprise demographic majorities in the nation-states of Indonesia, Malaysia, and Brunei and significant minority populations in the Philippines, Vietnam, Cambodia, Thailand, Myanmar, and Singapore.

This is found in the form of references to merchants and diplomatic envoys bearing identifiably Muslim names in Chinese texts recording their appearances at the Celestial Court representing tribute-trade missions from Sumatra, Brunei, Java, and Champa. Yet the ways in which Muslim men and women experience the myriad dimensions of sharia often go unnoticed and unpublicized.
