Drama, Medieval

The city of London, in which the vernacular mystery cycles seem not to have flourished, was known already in the 12th century for the production of miracle plays. Used in a procession of Morris dancers atop the Cerne Abbas giant on May Day and St.

The theory has been challenged by Professor Martial Rose, who has suggested that some towns, notably Wakefield and Lincoln, probably used a single playing space, an outdoor theater in the round, with stationary scaffolds arranged on the circumference of a large circle. The material of the performances was thoroughly obscene, evoking the disapproval even of a pagan emperor Marcus Aurelius and meriting the condemnation of many Christian leaders in the early days of the Church.
