Final negotiations : a story of love, loss, and chronic illness : Ellis, Carolyn, 1950

Parts of it were very hard to read. A compelling true story that you relate to even if you've never been in even a slightly similar situation.

Now, decades later, she reconsiders who she was then, and how she has continued to be affected both by these events and by writing about them. Contents: Beginning -- Negotiating attachment -- Negotiating stability and change -- Negotiating loss -- Negotiating the story. Parts of it were very hard to read.

Final negotiations : a story of love, loss, and chronic illness : Ellis, Carolyn, 1950

This memoir is about what it means to be involved, and in love, with someone chronically ill. I read this book for academic purposes but ended somewhere else by the end of it. She contemplates how she might act, think, and feel if she were going through the caregiving process again, now.

In so doing, she shows all of us how to do the same. Looking back over this book I find myself wondering how a book made me feel so many different emotions. In this work Ellis gives Gene Weinstein the greatest gift of all, a loving death.
