Rutherford-Madison-Teaneck: Fairleigh Dickinson UP, 1971 ; Italian Poets of the Renaissance. Mente tristi Ego vehor, vehor ego, Ac necessitatem nego Usque ad mortem laborandi. But there's no need to insult Stevens to elevate Lowell here.

Collected poems, 1943

The volumes Poets of the Renaissance and From Marino to Marinetti contain the largest number of Italian poets translated and published in a two-volume set.

Collected Poems by Carol Ann Duffy

What the poet is implying is that the loss of the emigrant's native language and the acquisition of a new, adopted idiom is the equivalent of translating oneself, growing apart from the land of origin, a betrayal and denial of one's history.
