The Preached Word and Reformation by Steven Lawson from The Next 500 Years: 2017 National Conference

For now, he insists, they are largely antithetical. Such, however, was the simplicity and perspicuity of his style, such the gravity and authority of his character, and such the general interest of his young hearers in the doctrines which he taught, that by the numerous audiences to which his instructions were addressed he was heard uniformly with the most silent and respectful attention.

The rise of his reputation was slow. Dr Joseph Robertson tells how Principal Leslie was in the year of the restoration of King Charles II made doctor to the poor of Aberdeen with a salary of £60 a-year. Yet I think the atheist acts the most consistent part of the two; for surely such views of human nature tend more to promote atheism than to promote religion and virtue.
