C, June 30, 1892, where he had gone to press his Indian and other claims against the Government.

Arizona

Force of character was his undoubtedly, yet, withal, his was a kindly and sympathetic heart, and many a time has he shared his scanty meal on the desert or in the mountains with some poor traveller or Indian. Differing entirely from the majority of the trappers of that day, he had no difficulties with the Indians, but was always free to enter their camps. Journal Information Founded in 1969, The Western Historical Quarterly, the official journal of the Western History Association, presents original scholarly articles dealing with the North American West - the westward movement from the Atlantic to the Pacific, twentieth-century regional studies, the Spanish borderlands, Native American history, and developments in western Canada, northern Mexico, Alaska, and Hawaii.
