Retribution and deterrence from the 19th to 21st century

With both positive and negative externalities of unknown magnitude, the net effect is indeterminate. In the early 18th century methods of law enforcement included a combination of parish constables, watchmen and part-time soldiers, all used to deal with different levels of disruption and crime.

The amounts involved varied from less than a shilling to hundreds of pounds. Appendix B: Two Models of Theft The issue of whether precautions by one potential victim injure or benefit other potential victims has been noted before in the literature, most recently by Hui-wen and Png.

History of law enforcement in the United Kingdom

Indeed many had a morbid fascination with the danger and debauchery of their lives.

None of these expedients proved satisfactory, and they were eventually replaced by transportation to Australia. If the victim of a crime won his case, the criminal was hanged, transported, or possibly pardoned. But it is far from clear whether that discontent was justified.

Crime and punishment

Dissatisfaction with the perceived problems of private prosecution, and concerns with what was perceived as a high and rising crime rate, eventually led to the introduction of full scale paid police forces, first in London in 1829 and later elsewhere in England.
