Ministry Magazine

But what about Hsinchu, in northern Taiwan? Over the past few decades, it has become increasingly clear that the existence and growth of cities are significantly linked to environmental issues. For example, accidental or intentionally started fires will increase, costing additional dollars and resources to suppress the flames that threaten homes, businesses and buildings.

Urban Ministry Initiatives

Beijing in 1950, for example, had a population of 1. Sri Lanka, Samoa, and Barbados, for example, appear to show relatively low levels of agricultural employment despite being predominantly rural. Its progress in greening has been impressive, benefitting at least 108 million city dwellers, accounting for 32% of the total greening at BUAs in the large cities over the world.

The Global Impacts of the Black Death

By 1800, still over 90 percent of the global and country-level population lived in rural areas. If possible, such data are adjusted to conform to the concept urban agglomeration.

The impact of urbanization and climate change on urban temperatures: a systematic review

With the emergence of green cities, the quality of life for many urban dwellers will likely continue to improve, and more large urban areas will morph into megacities.

Urban Ministry Initiatives

Ruth Hager joined Urban Impact in June 2013 after moving to Pittsburgh from Buena Vista, Colorado. People were attracted to cities not only for economic opportunity but also for the urban lifestyle.

First global study shows uneven urbanization among large cities in the last two decades

This has an effect on how we apply God's word to life.
