He had applied many years to the most severe study, and had treasured up a fund of learning rarely to be met with in a university.

Joseph Andrews, Vol. 1 by Henry Fielding

You either do not tell me truth, or you are false to a very worthy man. Betty told her mistress she believed the man in bed was a greater man than they took him for; for, besides the extreme whiteness of his skin, and the softness of his hands, she observed a very great familiarity between the gentleman and him; and added, she was certain they were intimate acquaintance, if not relations.

They were now walking in the inn-yard, when a fat, fair, short person rode in, and, alighting from his horse, went directly up to Barnabas, who was smoking his pipe on a bench. A Portrait of Robert Frost New York University 1969, 179 pp.

Full text of works of Henry

How ought man to rejoice that his chastity is always in his own power; that, if he hath sufficient strength of mind, he hath always a competent strength of body to defend himself, and cannot, like a poor weak woman, be ravished against his will! She danced with him all night, and enjoyed perhaps the highest pleasure that she was capable of feeling. To meet her soft Zephyrus flies.
