Condercum

However, the full defensive and offensive potential of the site at Tynemouth was not realized and for the remainder of the 16th century it was under manned and neglected. We then walked west back to Newcastle. It is believed that it was built between 122 AD and 124 AD.

Northern Cumbrian Coastal Defences

Pottery of the latter half of the 4th century or early years of the 5th was most abundant, although no contemporary structure was encountered. Birley The pottery from the Roman fort at Carzield Dumfriesshire. A building situated to the west of the sacristy has been interpreted as a priest's house connected to the church.

The Wreken Dike

From AD 222-35 the dividing wall was demolished, the supply base enlarged, and a new principia built on a different site. Fortunately I combined my trip with the Falkirk Wheel and the contemporary giant art of the Kelpies which made my trip more enjoyable.

Pastscape

Both were reached by bus 101 from Neuwied. These were demolished in advance of the construction of the new coastguard station in 1980.
