Unlike the Clean Water Act, the prohibition arising from a Clean Air Act conviction may be extended to other facilities owned or operated by the convicted person. These goals are deterrence, fair and equitable treatment of the regulated community and swift resolution of environmental problems. The consent agreement must state that the respondent admits the jurisdictional allegations of the complaint.

The lessee audits are used to verify environmental, safety and health compliance and minimize potential risk to the client. Knowing or reporting recordkeeping violations, such as failure to report a hazardous substance release, falsifying or destroying records required by regulations, falsifying or refusing emergency information under the Emergency Planning and Community Right to Know Act or submitting a false claim for fund reimbursement, carry a penalty of imprisonment of up to three years for the first conviction and five years for subsequent convictions. MAI designs and customized required training based on the specific needs of our client.
