Evidence suggests vocal production learning in a cross

Males make a lot of slow clicks in breeding grounds 74% of the time , both near the surface and at depth, which suggests they are primarily mating signals. By contrasting variability of frequency parameters with those of duration and modulation number of inflection points, of steps, of minima and of maxima , we found that CVs of signal duration were intermediate ranging from 27. Among aspects of particular interest are intraspecific behavioral interactions, with special focus on social behavior; interspecific behavioral mechanisms including competition and resource partitioning, mutualism, predator-prey interactions and parasitism; behavioral ecophysiology; orientation in space and time; and relevant evolutionary and functional theory.
