Economic development in Nigeria

Economic Transformation for High-Quality Growth: Insights from International Cooperation, by Akio Hosono Part III. Despite the overwhelming acknowledgment that effective systems of governance are needed in African countries, participants were unsure of how African countries could proceed to create new models of governance in a climate of decline and economic stagnation. This acceleration is a sign of hard-earned progress and promise.

Democracy and Governance in Africa

When we take into consideration the periods lagged values of aid, policy, and their interaction terms, as in model 2 , 4 , 6 , 8 , and 10 , we find that AID is statistically significant at the 5% level using the pooled OLS, first-difference, and random-effects model; and the models exhibit a negative aid-growth relationship. Yet, regardless of the approach, there is increasingly strong agreement among donors that political reforms in Africa must result in reduced corruption and more financial accountability, better observance of human rights, independent media and an independent judiciary, participatory politics, and a liberalized market economy in order to move closer to the ultimate goal of meaningful economic growth and development. Series of bombings have been carried out by the sect, as well as taking hostage of innocent citizens.

Democracy and Governance in Africa

A nonfederal Nigeria, for example, is barely conceivable, but federal systems in other states may carry different implications.

Foreign Aid and Growth in Africa: a case study of Uganda

The African Charter for Popular Participation in Development and Transformation, which was adopted by the plenary, holds that the absence of democracy is a principal reason for the persistent development challenges facing Africa: We affirm that nations cannot be built without the popular support and full participation of the people, nor can the economic crisis be resolved and the human and economic conditions improved without the full and effective contribution, creativity, and popular enthusiasm of the vast majority of the people. If present progress continues, some 5 million people will benefit from about 500 projects by 1999. As a goal, it is believed that every country should aspire to reach a point of security by protecting its citizens from structural violence, crime, and social insecurity.
