Indigenous health in Latin America and the Caribbean

In absolute terms, this translated into an increase of 84 million poor people, from 136 million in 1980 to 220 million in 2002. Bendix, Reinhard 1956 Work and Authority in Industry: Ideologies of Management in the Course of Industrialization.

Culture and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean

The process of Afro-Colombian displacement reaffirms the importance of collective land ownership for this community. Both concepts lose their tacit meaning when translated into Spanish, and even further so when translated into English. The first, natural resource characteristics, includes the types of resources, the natural services they provide, and the kinds and intensities of use, stress, and disturbance regimes to which they are subjected.

Contemporary Latin American Inequality: Class Struggle, Decolonization, and the Limits of Liberal Citizenship

An introduction to key concepts from development theory, social movements research, cultural studies, and political economy analysis.

Societal Analysis

Funded under the subsidized regimen it currently has 166,000 members. The aspiration and capacity to transcend, both in social life and in our analyses of it, are particularly prominent today. It is this plural set of rights that provides the Ecuadorian BV with a stronger policy framework for sustainability.

Monthly Review

While set-asides that are protected from undue human influence have continued to be part of the conservation lexicon, since World War II other strategies have arisen that stress the sustainable use of resources for human benefit, relying on scientific methods to improve efficiency, in parallel with the increasing emphasis on economic growth and efficiency in the post-war development world Schmink and Jouve-Martín 2011.

Indigenous health in Latin America and the Caribbean

How far are concepts that have been lifted out of Western folk sociology and put into the technical vocabulary of the social sciences—concepts such as family, , feudalism, and law—adequate for a truly comparative? The hour of eugenics: race, gender, and nation in Latin America. Taught: Annually, 4 semester credits.
