that the Glasgow division of the Allan service required a certain amount of attention, and accordingly in 1906 the Grampian and Hesperian, the latter to be sacrificed during the war, were laid down. The old Waldensian, which was thought fit to have triple expansion engines fitted into her by Messrs. The schooner eventually arrived safely in port, where two days were spent repairing the damage, which was mainly to the sails and rigging - the foresail alone had thirteen holes in it.

The parish of Dalton

Hard cover in dust jacket. Soon after this alteration her registration was transferred from Barrow to Barnstaple. On the 21 st July, however, she was torpedoed without warning near Filey Brig and went down with a loss of 36 lives, many of whom were involved in the explosion.

In the next year the Damascus was bought from the Cunard, a much smaller ship of 1,214 tons which was re-christened Corinthian. This was not allowed to stand for long, for as soon as the Empress of Britain was on service she began to show an exceptional turn of speed, but it was not until her second voyage that she broke the record between Father Point, Quebec, and Liverpool, 5 days 12 hours 15 seconds. He died in April 1663, soon after the Restoration, and was succeeded by his brother Thomas, aged twentyone in 1665, when he recorded a pedigree.

Demand for ore, iron and later steel products was fuelled by the expansion of the railways. The first and only one to be built in the 19th century, the 'Hainaut' was ordered by R.

Latham, John & James

Inglis built the Prussian 3,030 tons and Steele's the Scandinavian of 3,068, both fitted with engines of 500 N. Built in Hull in 1857, they served the coastal trade for the Intercolonial Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, with one operating the Nelson - New Plymouth - Manukau run, then swapping with the other to carry out the Nelson - Wellington - Lyttelton - Port Chalmers run, after arriving in Nelson from Sydney carrying passengers and mail.
