Experts generally concur that is one of the most crimes in the world, and one there is a general reluctance to discuss. Differences between developed and developing countries also emerged in connection with prevention strategies, with most differences arising in the areas of availability of services overall and greater access to health care and home-based strategies. Only two members of the United Nations—the United States and Somalia—have yet to ratify the CRC, although both countries have indicated their intent to do so by formally signing the convention.

Global Perspective on Child Abuse

This global epidemic needs global action to eradicate. Most policies also included information on mandatory and voluntary reporting laws. For those people who say 'a light spanking', this can still scar a child.

And the risk factors for abuse look remarkably similar in different countries. Definitions of physical abuse included any non-accidental behavior by parents that leads to physical harm or placing a child at risk of physical abuse.

what is your view on child abuse?

Desmond Runyan of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, concluded that an estimated 57,000 children die each year from physical abuse. Parents yelling at children appears to be nearly universal, he found. They're safety and well-being should be ensured by their parents and the community.
