What happened, in fact, was that although the overall rate of Japanese growth slowed considerably, the efforts to respond to energy constraints with increasing productivity, and to sustain export levels, not only generated a substantial increase in the volume of trade between the two countries, but also marked the start of a consistently growing Japanese surplus in commodity trade with Britain. Anglo-Japanese capital investment in China As we saw from Table 1. Complaints about copyright infringement and patenting continued through the 1960s.

The History of Anglo

Economist, 20 August 1955, p. This posed a dilemma for SCAP, since it meant that Japanese products especially textiles sold in Southeast Asian sterling countries were no longer a source of dollars to pay for raw materials.
