Un Chant D'Amour (1950)

They succeed surprisingly well and also manage, for the most part to avoid getting caught by the warden.

3 Songs, Op.5 (Fauré, Gabriel)

The complicity between authority and criminality is a favourite Genet theme. His gaze, though, is explicitly fetishised - he is made complicit in what he sees.

Chant d'amour / James R. Gillette.

The only things preventing me from giving this film the full 10. I'm not gay myself, but I can certainly identify with this film to an extent, it is like a visual representation of the great emotional toll love can have on a person, and it's brilliantly made.

Un Chant D'Amour (1950)

It's frightfully old, but personally I find that the somewhat surreal, almost at points dreamlike style of the way that it's filmed gives it something of a timeless quality. I guess being familiar with his novels - Our Lady of Flowers, Funeral Rites, etc - I took it for granted that his film would necessarily be set in a prison and involve human longing manifest in homosexual contact between inmates. Fassbinder, whose dream project, an adaptation of Genet's Querelle de Brest 1982 , would be the acclaimed German filmmaker's final film prior to his death at the age of 37.

The Song of Love

Graham later commissioned Burne-Jones to paint an enlarged oil version of the 1865 watercolour and this is the painting now owned by the Metropolitan. The bust could be a representation of De Chirico's love of classical art and a disappearing age.
