But the sun rose over the snowfields and woke me where I lay, and I rose and cast a shadow over someplace, and thought, There is, God help us, more. And there is no way to figure out these random events. If she's out there and sees this, thank you Annie for this little book.

Holy the Firm Quotes by Annie Dillard

Nature seen so clear and hard that the eyes tear.

Dillard's description of the moth's death makes Virginia Woolf's go dim and Edwardian. Julie Norwich, seven years old, a neighbor's child, she who likes to play with Small and is learning to whistle, gets her face burnt off by the ignited plane fuel. To avoid spoilers, I will just say that after the second read I closed the book to discover I had been crying and my heart, racing.
