Bohemian legends and other poems/A Jewish Legend of Prague

Loud pealed the thunder From arsenal high, Bright flashed the lightning Athwart the broad sky; Fasto er the prairie, Through torrent and shade, Sought the red hunter His hut in the glade. I need not crush myself within a mould Of theory called Nature: I have room To breathe and grow unstunted.

Legend of the Sand Dollar

All was forgotten but the burning need'To claim his fuller self, to claim the deed'That lived away from him, and grew apart, While he as from a tomb, with lonely heart, Warmed by no meeting glance, no hand that pressed, Lay chill amid the life his life had blessed.

Bohemian legends and other poems/A Bohemian Legend

Of such a woman in the social mart. After all gestures, words, and speech of eyes, The soul had more to tell, and broke in sighs.

Winona, a Dakota Legend; and Other Poems by E. L. Huggins

Since fame once earned By luck or merit- oftenest by luck Else why do I put Bonifazio's name To work that' pinxit Naldo' would not sell? Better he should die for Israel, If Jehovah will it so, Than sink down beside the others, Who are lying still and low. No jacket--not published with one.
