The consideration of health in strategic environmental assessment (SEA)

This uncertainty is reflected in local authority Infrastructure Delivery Plans IDPs. High levels of dioxin exposure found in workplaces and after accidents such as that at Seveso have caused chloracne and an increase in cardiovascular disease.

The future of UK plastics recycling: One Bin to Rule Them All

The three largest waste streams in this category are oils and oily wastes, construction and demolition waste and asbestos, and wastes from organic chemical processes.

The consideration of health in strategic environmental assessment (SEA)

The type of work varies between waste management options with some, such as landfill and incineration, being more automated than others, such as waste collection, sorting and recycling. This would be particularly relevant in situations where one or two specific substances are of concern either because of high levels of exposure or because of the health effects the substance may cause , but may be less appropriate for investigating the more general exposures emitted from waste management processes, which tend to be heterogeneous in nature.

RTPI

There is an extensive research literature on both the acute and chronic effects of particles see Chapters 10 and 11. With scientists warning we have just 12 years to tackle climate change, this strategy is too little, too slowly. It should also lead to greater harmonisation of services, which makes life easier for consumers.
