Data in italics. Numbers in this report may not sum to 100, and related figures may not sum to numbers indicated.

*This group consists of converts to a variety of different backgrounds, including converts to Catholicism and converts from non-religious status than Christianity or Protestantism. Because this is a sum of separate groups, it is not weighted to match the total of the report.

**Estimate of religious change among those in their childhood faith come from the most recent survey, other estimates from 2007 U.S. Religious Landscape Survey.

Note: A small number of respondents were excluded from the analysis because they gave no response to either the question of religious affiliation or the religious language survey. Converts within the unaffiliated category do belong to small groups within the "Other Christian," "Non-Christian religious," or "Other faith" religious traditions. In total, these excluded cases represent roughly 4% of the U.S. population.
