Oral History Project interviews with Harald A. Wall Street Journal, March 18, 1994: A1, A5. Was the ability to reconcile these cognitions something unique pertaining to creative individuals such as Soviet BW scientists , or was it a more universal trait acquired by those living in a totalitarian political system? But if the poor see that there is no hope for them, that they are condemned to remain poor forever, then they will grasp the pillars of society and pull them down on themselves and on society, thus burying everything.
