Timeline of Events From 1840 to 1850

The emigrant became one of the prime vessels of transmission for American culture within French Canada. Along with an additional quota of 200,000 granted in 1953 and more in succeeding years, a total of nearly 600,000 refugees were allowed into the country outside the quota system, second only to Israel's 650,000. Over 90% of these early immigrants became farmers.

Ireland's population in the mid 1800's

The Wizard is based on the detailed and extensive analysis of over 10,000 dated cartes de visite and cabinet cards supplemented by examination of trade directory dates for over 33,000 UK photographers and 65,000 studio addresses. The development of the railway stimulated emigration. In 1790 42% of the population in South Carolina and Georgia was of African origin.

Photographers Archives

In fact, in 1900, the New England area contained ten cities with a French Canadian population in excess of 10,000, while Quebec only had five, most of them barely above 10,000.

WILLIAMS Genealogy

The practice of bleeding cattle and mixing the blood with milk and butter similar to the practice of the was not uncommon. Emigration was a disaster not only because it placed French Canadians in a foreign country but also because it exposed them to a foreign environment: the dangerous and dirty life of urban, industrial exploitation.
