Country Reports

While growth has primarily benefited the South, where most urban areas are located, demographic and economic patterns are more complex. This model is accompanied by a set of commentaries that reflect OECD-level interpretation of the content of the model convention provisions.

OECD Territorial Reviews: Competitive Cities in the Global Economy

Autonomous public authority at the metro-regional level may seek devolved powers priorities whilst the higher levels of government central or state government in federal countries still want to maintain control on large cities. An OECD Territorial Review is an in-depth research exercise that benchmarks the city or region against peers internationally, and examines development strengths and weaknesses in the target area.
