Monteverdi's L'incoronazione di Poppea: The Poppea Project

The opera, which was first performed in Venice, in 1643, features three acts and set the stage for the development of the modern opera form.

Yet there is little indication that Monteverdi intended the drama to be as much political as erotic, and Carsen well-nigh wrecks the ending by allowing the relationship between Poppea and Nerone to unravel during the great final duet, precisely at the point where it should be at its most intense. Carsen and his set designer Michael Levine have devised a simple visual metaphor of crimson drapes, whose shifting configurations take us deep into Nero's corrupt empire and the cocoon-like bedchamber at the heart of it.
