Hearing on H.R. 23, the Thank You to the Merchant Mariners of World War II Act of

However, such a commission should be of limited duration with a provision for statutory extension. The least that our Government could do to aid these American lines would be to give them the carrying of its own soldiers and their supplies. It is the desire of the Commission that those of you who participate in the discussion will feel at liberty to present the subject each in his own way, it being understood in advance that the Commission is not here for the purpose of exploiting any particular theory or advancing the interests of any particular measure.

Members of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, it is indeed an honor to be able to express our views on H. To sum up, therefore, it may be said that every nation possessing a deep-sea merchant fleet of any real importance encourages and supports this interest to the degree and in the way which its judgment approves or its national resources make possible. The authority itself, as you know and I know, and each of you have a copy of my proposal, would then move ahead granting licenses on a first-come-first-serve basis ; when there is disagreement, the authority would refer it to an adjudicating body.

Steamers produce seamen, it is true — men who acquire the sea habit — but not sailors in the strict sense of the word, men who do not only have the sea habit but the well-known characteristics of the sailor, his skill in meeting all the vicissitudes of life at sea, his contempt for danger, his self-reliance under difficulties, his adaptability to all sorts and conditions of circumstances. France and Japan both pay what is in effect a naval bounty to their deep-sea fishermen.
