If, for example, you are ruled by spirit, then your reason conceives of your good in terms of what is honorable.

Plato's Ethics and Politics in The Republic (Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy)

He feels that he is drawing nearer to the world below, and seems to linger around the memory of the past. Even if he successfully maintains that acting justly is identical to being happy, he might think that there are circumstances in which no just person could act justly and thus be happy. A little experience may make a man a cynic; a great deal will bring him back to a truer and kindlier view of the mixed nature of himself and his fellow men.
