Building Your Support Network

As every business leader quickly finds, it's lonely at the top. For all these reasons, solutions involving single sign-on are needed for teachers and students to access all their applications through a single log-in credential.

Networks

States including California, Illinois, Utah, and Washington have established programs to help teachers access, curate, refine, and share openly licensed learning resources.

Building Community

Give more than you ask to receive. School officials, families, and software developers have to be mindful of how data privacy, confidentiality, and security practices affect students. Friends and loved ones can make you more resilient in times of stress, setback, or loss and they can also make the good times even better.

Building support for RTI implementation

In addition, it helps to understand the employment needs in the area. The Choctaw Nation Tribal Area has demonstrated how—through a combination of grants, loans, and donations—private industries can bring critical access to these underserved communities. Loneliness has been associated with a wide variety of health problems including high blood pressure, diminished immunity, cardiovascular disease and cognitive decline.

How to Build Your Network

IPN provides training unique to the principal regarding higher level perspectives on leadership.

How to Build a Support System

Determine how the success of 21st century competency development can be demonstrated, reflecting the priorities of the community. Try to enjoy the experience as you get to know others over time. A few examples of roadblocks include, low self-esteem, lack of confidence, depression, misguided life priorities, disorganization in your life, , or difficulty asking for and accepting help from others.
